Getting the Right Care

Throughout the month of February we use the heart as a symbol for love, but it raises an important question-how much love are we showing our hearts? According to the CDC, cardiovascular disease-including heart disease, stroke, and high blood pressure-is the number 1 killer of women and men in the United States.

Fortunately, there are many things you can do reduce your chances of getting heart disease.

You should:

- Know your blood pressure and keep it under control
- Exercise regularly; Don't smoke
- Get tested for diabetes and if you have it, keep it under control
- Know your cholesterol and triglyceride levels and keep them under control
- Eat a lot of fruits and vegetables; Maintain a healthy weight

Feeling Stressed?

Your heart could be paying the price! Mental stress does more than diminish your sense of well-being; it also can increase your risk of heart disease.

Chronic stress can...

- Raise blood cholesterol and blood pressure, resulting in hardening of the arteries.
- Prompt unhealthy habits like smoking, overeating and excessive drinking- additional factors that can increase your risk.

To counteract stress...

- Exercise. Aim for 30 minutes of moderately intense activity, such as brisk walking, most days of the week.
- Build-up your support system. Supportive people can reduce your stress and help you take better care of yourself.
- Seek help for depression or anxiety.

Avoid Caregiver Burnout

Many caregivers push themselves too hard. This can lead to feeling "burned out".

To create a healthy balance between caring for others and yourself, our experts suggest the following:

- Define the problem. Set limits on your time and energy.
- Decide on strategies. Figure out what you can reasonably do and what resources you may need. If you decide you'll visit your mother twice a week to cook, then enlist family members to help on other days.
- Find personal support. For example, caregiver support groups can be helpful for sharing resources and offering encouragement.
